This book is intended as a social history showing how railways have developed in this part of Surrey over the years. It is not a detailed technical study but describes how the system grew and changed as the part played by railways varied. The arrival of the railways was, for many people, their first opportunity to travel more than a few miles from home. It also enabled goods to be delivered over a much wider area than hitherto.

When the various smaller companies in this area were grouped into the Southern Railway in 1923 the need for stations from competing companies in the same town disappeared and many stations were closed, as occurred in Epsom and Leatherhead. The book also describes industrial and narrow-gauge railways in Surrey and mentions some preserved lines where one can re-live the experience of railways as we once knew them.

It costs £10.00 - Copies may be purchased from Leatherhead Museum and all good booksellers or post free from our Sales Secretary, 64 Church St, Leatherhead, KT22 8DP. Cheques payable to 'L&DLHS'
